Byron at Venice—Madam Guiccioli Taken to Task.

The following letter appears in the London Athenæum:

"VERSAILLES, May, 1869.

"I regret to learn that Madam Guiccioli has made too free with my name and opinions respecting Lord Byron. I hope she does not say that I enjoyed the advantages of her acquaintance at Venice, for although I cannot absolutely say I never saw her, I can safely assert the next thing to it. Lord Byron was always very kind to me, and having three horses at the Lido (the long island which separates the Laguna from the sea), offered me the use of one of them. Sometimes he called for me on his way there, sometimes I went to his house to meet him. On one of these occasions, while he was at his breakfast, a female crossed the room, entering on one side and leaving it at the opposite door, in whose appearance there was nothing to attract attention, and I actually took her for one of the maids of the house, learning only from him when she had passed that it was Madam Guiccioli. If I had met her five minutes later I should not have recognized her, so little had I observed her.

"I certainly did not approve the life Lord Byron led at Venice, and as far as I felt myself warranted in doing so, never scrupled to tell him so; but we were nearly of the same age, which, with our different positions in life, would have only rendered me ridiculous if I had affected to play the Mentor with him. In all my intercourse with him, I almost invariably found him cheerful and good natured; or if at moments he was less so, he accounted for it by saying his foot caused him much pain. This I have no doubt was often the case. In a previous letter I have said he led a 'foolish, disreputable life,' on which account I well remember to have told him he made himself ridiculous in the eyes of every one, and I have little doubt it was his disgust with the very life he was leading which made him take a dislike to Venice, and glad of the opportunity the connexion he about this time formed with Madame Guiccioli offered him to quit it altogether. It was pretty evident to me that he at first cared little for her, however much his vanity may have been flattered on seeing the impression he had made on a young lady of rank in society so different from the other women he had known since his arrival in Venice, and it depended on the toss up of a halfpenny whether he would follow her to Ravenna or return to England. To this latter step I strongly advised him, but the dread of the reception he might meet with there, and the encouragement he received from Madame Guiccioli to follow her, prevailed over his better genius (not meaning myself) and decided his fate.

"Allegra was the daughter of a young English girl—a kind of connexion of Mrs. Shelley, whom he met at Geneva, where Madame Guiccioli wishes to represent his life as a pattern of morality. She was not by any means an amiable child, nor was Mrs. Hoppner or I particularly fond of her; but we had taken her to live with us, not thinking Lord Byron's house (he living at the time with another woman) a very proper one either for the infant or her nurse, a young Swiss girl, who, besides, had no kind of experience as to the care of children. She died in a convent at Ravenna, to which Lord Byron placed her when he followed Madame Guiccioli there. Lord Byron was occasionally annoyed by the impertinence of English travelers, who forced their way into his house or followed him about; but he was far from showing any disgust with them in general, frequently coming to meet strangers of an evening at my house, though he well knew when he came there that he would not find us alone. I don't believe that Lord Byron was naturally of a saturnine disposition, but think the misanthropy that figures as part of his character in his early writings was merely a poetical fiction. His love of pleasure and the eagerness with which he pursued it certainly seem to prove him to have been of anything but a melancholy disposition.

"During the Carnival at Venice he was a constant attendant at the Ridotto, a kind of masked ball, where he witnessed scenes which supplied him with materials for his 'Beppo.' He had always a box at the Fenice Theatre during the season. He passed his evenings at one or other of three houses occupied by Venetian ladies, where a stranger had an opportunity of seeing something of Venetian society, and he readily took part in any amusement to which he was always willing to contribute his share. So far as I am able to confirm Madame Guiccioli's opinion, that he was not of a misanthropical disposition, but this has nothing to do with the life he led at Venice; and she is decidedly wrong in asserting that I was his constant companion of an afternoon, unless she alludes to our rides together on the Lido, as I only spent the evenings with him when he came to my own house, or when I met him in his visits he paid to those of the Venetian ladies I have mentioned. I visited him sometimes in his box at the theatre, but this is not what Madame Guiccioli would wish to infer.

"Lady H—, who saw Lord Byron frequently at Genoa, and also Madame Guiccioli, assured me she was convinced he went to Greece to get away from her, which I can well believe, as he had lived four years with her—three more than, according to his own account, it was in his nature to live with any woman.

"R. BELGRAVE HOPPNER."

Planting Strawberries.

From the Massachusetts Ploughman

Select the best acre of land upon your farm. It cannot be too much for it will produce a good crop of Indian corn. If the land is in grass, plant it one year with potatoes, spreading upon it a liberal supply of compost. Do not plow in the spring until the soil is sufficiently dry to admit of its being worked without lumps. Spread a liberal dressing of well composted manure upon the surface and work it with the harrow. This is preferable to turning it under with the plow, as in the latter case it is likely to be buried so deep that the roots of the strawberry plant which grow so near the surface will not receive full benefit.

The ground should be worked with the harrow, and raked if need be, until it is entirely free from lumps and stones, and as well pulverized as a garden bed. Mark the rows three feet apart, and set the plants one foot apart in the row. Cutting off one-third the length of the roots will not injure the plants, and will greatly facilitate planting. Care should be taken to compact the earth firmly around each plant. A man who will set 150 plants a day in a thorough manner, is better help than one who will set more. Spring planting is decidedly best, for although the books say that a moderate crop may be expected the first year, if the plants are set in the fall, experience teaches that if you take a crop of fruit the first season, you sacrifice the growth of the plant, and give it less hardihood with which to endure the first winter.

Cut away the fruit stalks the first season, and for every quart of fruit you might have had, you will receive four quarts additional the second season. Cut away every runner, and keep your plants in perfect rows, so as to run the cultivator through them the first year, as that will do a great part of the labor of cultivation at small expense. The second season a wheel hoe may be run between the rows in place of the cultivator. Some hand weeding must also be done at intervals during the season. After the first year, it is a good plan to draw the earth up to the plants with a hoe, for strawberry plants, like flowering bulbs, have a tendency to grow nearer the surface each succeeding year, and consequently become more exposed to drouth and frost.

The recent typhus fever epidemic, at Brussels, carried off 809 persons out of 3,644 attacked.

Hoffman, and his Moral Tricks.

From the Chicago Tribune

When a Democratic politician sets up in business as a reformer and discourses with deep unction and fervent zeal upon some microscopic iniquity which he proposes with an impressive flourish of trumpets to annihilate, we may safely assume that he is "laying low for higher game," and getting up his credit to fall rich. We suspected this of the Honorable John T. Hoffman, who was ballot stuffed into the Governorship of New York at the last election, when he came the "high moral dodge" on the cross-roads churches and rat and tan turnpikes that wanted two-pennyworth of special legislation at the Albany shop and had barely the two pence to pay for it. How gracefully his Gubernatorial Hoffmanship swept down on such small game like a royal falcon on the quivering dove, and how the pluffeathers flew. Holy writ was not more searching, or a blow from a sledge-hammer more convincing, than one of the balls John T. Hoffman's vetoes when it came athwart the horses of the Bangtown deacons and obliged them to sell their church property by some more expensive mode than an act of the Legislature.

But we, in common with the press of the country, rendered hearty praise to Governor Hoffman for the unexpected piety evinced in his hostility to special legislation. We praised him all the more heartily because we feared our chance to praise him would be short, and we yearned to "hold up his weak hands and strengthen his feeble knees" while we might. Our fears were too well founded. The Governor drove a sharp moral trade for a few months, and was rapidly accumulating a large credit as the anointed champion of the people against the spoilers, and the sworn foe of special legislation. But at last came a batch of special bills belonging to James Fisk, Jr., Prince of Erie, and the real Governor of New York, and were submitted to the nominal Governor. The chief was one to continue the present Directors of the Erie Railway in office for five years, by providing that only a fifth of the Directors of either of the four leading railways of New York shall be turned out by the stockholders or re-elected each year. Neither of the three Vanderbilt companies asked for any such law, and Vanderbilt has promptly announced that they will not avail themselves of it. It is purely a Tammany Hall act to perpetuate the hold of a trio of leeches on the road from which they are sucking the last resources. Hoffman's interest in the matter arises from the well known consolidation heretofore announced between Erie and Tammany Hall, whereby Tammany Hall appoints two of its sachems as Directors of Erie, and agrees to furnish the laws and decisions necessary to perpetuate the reign of James Fisk, Jr., while Fisk furnishes a very large share of the money and eight or ten thousand of the votes essential to the general comfort and well being of Tammany Hall, Governor Hoffman, Judge Barnard & Co. By an astonishing impertinence the Vanderbilt roads were included in the act without consulting their officers, in order to divest it in part of the evidence it would else afford that Hon. John T. Hoffman was a member of the above mentioned firm. Besides this, the Governor signed a bill to consolidate the Vanderbilt roads, a bill to enable the New York Central Railroad Company to increase its capital stock 80 per cent, and a bill to give certain streets in New York to the Harlem Railroad Company for a debt. All these are acts of special legislation of the very worst and most corrupt character. They are so manifestly in violation of the professions heretofore put forth by Mr. Hoffman that he feels compelled to accompany his signature to them by an exculpatory message, inventing pretexts for signing them. We need not dwell on his apologies. They only show that as "the ox knoweth its owner and the ass his master's crib," so John T. Hoffman knows a bill of James Fisk, Jr's., when he sees it, and also the wide distinction that exists in the Democratic mind between special legislation for Cornelius Vanderbilt's roads and special legislation on behalf of the Bangtown deacons.

Of course Governor Hoffman refused to sign the bill to secure a perfect registry of voters and prevent fraudulent voting. Such a bill ought to have been entitled "An act to cast insinuations reflections on our present Governor, and to prevent his re-election." As Governor, he could only veto it; but if he had the Papal power of cursing and excommunication, he could doubtless "condemn" it in its various parts and members with ultra pontifical fluency and force.

French Morals and Manners—Culture of the Parisian Young Lady.

(From Appleton's Journal.)

The devotion of the French mother to her children is very great, and her household duties absorb much of her time; while no where can be seen greater display of devoted affection and demonstrative fondness than in a well ordered French household. Free, gently, even after the marriage of the younger members, the united families continue to live together under the same roof—and the pleasing spectacle is often exhibited of three generations sitting daily at the same board, and dwelling together under the patriarchal control of the aged grand-parents. The separation of families, almost universal with us, when the new scions are transplanted to the West, and the parents are left solitary in their old age, while their offspring are propping new religions, far from the old homestead, is not so common in France, and the tendency is to cluster together, not to scatter. Thus the parental influence is felt and exerted throughout life, the experience and wisdom of age ever tempering the headlong ardor of youth and the matured plans of manhood, for the foundation of all society is in the family, and the stronger that the, the healthier and happier will be the society built upon it. In all societies, woman gives it the tone, whether as mother, wife and head of a household; and the training she receives determines the measure of her influence, and the good or evil effects it produces. The training of the French girl is exceptionally good for this purpose, and her purity of mind and freshness of feeling preserved by the system, which is sneered at by those who do not comprehend it. The parental supervision of the boys is very strict, but that over the girls is stricter still, and they are treated as children up to the period of assuming the obligations of the heads of households themselves, and guarded as carefully from all contact with the other sex as under a different system in the East. The mind and heart of a young French girl, tenderly nurtured, are like a virgin page of paper on which no impressions have yet been made—innocent of evil thoughts or deeds, and unhackneyed by premature experiences. The will of the parents has ever been the child's law; and that perhaps makes her believe love making, styled "flirtation"—in which young America indulges freely on entering her teens—the French girl would shrink from as immodest and shameless.

The French girl is taken early into society, but always under her mother's wing and strict supervision; and her shrinking modesty and timidity of manner surprise the American or Englishman, accustomed to the frank fearlessness of his fair young compatriots, who agree with the poet Burns that and by no means an alarming creature. "The Girl of the Period," as dissected in the Saturday Review and Echoes from the Clubs—who doubtless exists on that side of the channel, and whose imitators, with the aid of strong glasses, we can detect on Fifth Avenue and on Broadway even here—is unknown in France, who may export her native frolics, but never imports one from abroad, not being an imitative country in such matters.

"A man's a man for a' that,"

A New York clergyman, stopping recently at the village of North Brookfield, about sixty miles from Boston, took a stroll through the cemetery, and, in the vaults belonging to several families of wealth and respectability, he found a number of coffins uncovered, and their contents exposed to the air and the pranks of hideous jokers. The covers had either been carried away or broken, and on the bosom of one corpse he saw a couple of bricks, which had evidently been thrown in through a frolic. In another coffin he found a large snake crawling.

The New York Herald states that Mountain Boy trotted a quarter of a mile, the other morning, at the Union Course, in thirty one seconds and a half. Bruno and Dexter have also trotted quarters in thirty one seconds and a half; and Mr. Bonner's mare Peerless has been tried a quarter, by Captain Moore and another gentleman, in thirty seconds.

MIDNIGHT DISPATCHES.

BY THE WESTERN UNION LINE.

VERY LATEST NEWS.

General News.

NEW YORK, June 9.

The citizens of Rome, this State, voted yesterday against water works.

In Lodi, New York, yesterday, five men employed in the print works, who had been in the habit of drinking a beverage composed partly of oil of vitriol and alcohol, were poisoned by taking arsenic in the mixture in mistake for vitriol. Four of the men died within a few hours, and the fifth is apparently dying.

The Attorney General is said to have hesitated a long time before he finished his recent opinion sustaining a Texas court martial in the trial of a citizen for the murder of a freedman, that his actual view of the law suggested an entirely opposite decision, that Gen. Butler said he would offer a resolution on the subject in the next session, if he, Hoar, did not make an example of some of these fellows, and under this pressure the recent opinion was made.

The steamers German, from Bremen, and the Columbia, from Glasgow, have arrived.

It is stated in Cabinet meeting among the matters discussed was the State of Georgia. Attorney General Hoar submitted a basis of his opinion, called for by the President, and the latter made some suggestions for consideration of Hoar. What was the final conclusion has not transpired.

The second and last day of the great German Workingmen's Festival passed off yesterday at Jones' Woods. As many as the crowd was present, speaking took place in the evening by William Sylvis, Henry Tucker, Chas. Peel and others and during the morning. In the evening there was constant eating, drinking and dancing. The proceeds of the festival were for the Arbeiter Union, a new German paper.

Indian Agent.

WASHINGTON, June 9.

Orders assigning Captain Baldwin to duty in connection with registration in Virginia have been revoked. He is ordered to duty as Indian Agent.

Secretary Porter.

During the absence of the President Private Secretary Porter will remain on duty in charge of the Executive office.

Sons of Temperance.

The representatives of the National Divisions of the Sons of Temperance of North America are now in session in this city. Many of them, accompanied by members of their families, proceeded today to the Eight Rooms, and in accordance with previous arrangements the visitors, about 250 in number, formed in a semi-circle, when President Grant entered the room and was addressed by Robert M. Fine, of Pennsylvania, Most Worthy Patriarch of the organization. The President bowed, but made no verbal reply. The visitors then formed in line and were introduced and shook hands, and as this ceremony was completed he retired.

Letter from Alex. Stephens.

Alexander Stephens, of Georgia, has a letter in one of the Washington papers today in reply to some criticism on his History of the Rebellion. He takes a very gloomy view of the situation, and argues that we are drifting to consolidation and empire. Nothing, he says, can prevent the final establishment of imperialism but a determined effort on the part of the people to preserve free institutions. This remedy, he says, is not in secession—that was tried and found results worse than that of the ballot box. He calls upon the people of the several States to emancipate themselves from the thralldom of corporations, and wonder they will maintain free institutions or accept imperialism.

Cuba.

Information from reliable sources in Havana is received, which shows the Cubans are making more offensive movements, and were never in better spirits or more sanguine of success. Telegrams from Havana deny the report that any number of Cubans or any officers of the Cuban forces had surrendered to Valmaseda. This afternoon Col. Manuel Freyer was introduced to the President by the Secretary of State, and delivered his credentials as envoy.

Fenian Arrested.

LONDON, June 9.

Dispatches from Cork mention one Johnson, a printer, arrested in that city last evening on a charge of being connected with Fenian organizations. His particular offence consisted in circulating documents of a treasonable character among soldiers.

Emigration.

LIVERPOOL, June 9.

Emigration to America is setting in very strongly. Eight thousand people left this port last week.

The Election.

PARIS, June 9.

The following are official returns of the recent elections: Government 320; Opposition, 98; unknown, 1. The general result is pretty accurately known, and the next Corps Legislatif will be composed as follows: Government, 215; Independents, 12; Radical, 35.

Riots.

Quite serious riots occurred at Nantes and Bordeaux yesterday.

Political.

MADRID, June 9.

The project for regency was debated at great length in the Cortes yesterday, and was at last referred to a committee. During the discussion Plazaga stated an election of King at present was impossible.

Boundary Treaty.

VIENNA, June 9.

It is said that a treaty has been concluded by the commission appointed by the Turkish and Persian Governments to arrange a boundary between the two countries.

Refreshment for the Jubilee.

BOSTON, June 9.

There was a general rehearsal of about five thousand voices in Music Hall, this evening, on which occasion Gilmore wielded the baton. The choruses were generally confined to the popular national airs. And such strains as "Hail Columbia," "Star Spangled Banner," and "The Harp that Once Through Tara's Hall," were among those which were rendered. Other pieces were rehearsed with almost equal effect and each succeeding day equal.

Police Shot Killed.

The Metropolitan Police Bill was killed in the Senate 27 to 1.

President Grant.

President Grant will attend the opening ceremony of the Peace Jubilee. Gov. Clafflin has ordered a military escort for the occasion. The city government will give the President a grand banquet during his stay.

Institute of Homeopathy.

In the American Institute of Homeopathists today Dr. Helmuth, of St. Louis, read a paper on the extirpation of the bowel tube, defending his statement against Dr. Franklin's criticism. Dr. Hale, of Chicago, read an interesting paper. The Committee on Credentials reported 15 State societies, 45 local or county societies, 18 hospitals, 24 dispensaries and 32 medical journals represented by 122 delegates. This afternoon the members of the institute had a harbor excursion and in the evening enjoyed a social levee and collation in Music Hall, as guests of the city.

Senator Cassidy.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 9.

Senator Cassidy arrived last night. He was received at the boat by the Democratic clubs and escorted to his hotel, where he made a brief speech.

Election in Washington Territory.

Returns from eight to ten counties in Washington Territory give Gen. Gafield, Republican, 421 majority, nominating his election to Congress by five hundred and odd.

Indian Affairs.

Arizona advices of May 22d say: It is rumored Henry Dodson and party, who started from Prescott for the Eastern States via New Mexico, were murdered by Indians.

Indians are numerous in the vicinity of Prescott and continue depredations. An expedition under Col. Green attacked a party of Indians near Tucson, killed thirty and captured eight.

General Hallock.

Gen. Hallock, last night, was the recipient of a handsome gold badge from the veterans of the Mexican war. Hallock and staff departed overland to-day for Louisville, his future headquarters, as commander of the division of the South.

The Tunnel Bill.

DETROIT, June 9.

The River Bridge, or Tunnel bill, was rejected on representations by the Great Western Railway Company that it would undertake the construction of the work within twelve months.

Publishers' Convention.

ADRIAN, Mich., June 9.

The State Convention of Newspaper Publishers commenced its third annual session here yesterday afternoon, President E. B. Bond in the chair. L. D. Bingham was elected President for the ensuing year, and T. S. Applegate Secretary and Treasurer. The next meeting of the Association will be held at Kalamazoo. This forenoon the Association starts on excursion west on the Michigan Southern to White Pigeon and Kalamazoo, thence to Grand Rapids, down the Detroit & Milwaukee road to Detroit, arriving there Saturday. There was a good attendence and the proceedings were of a very satisfactory character.

Harness Makers' Pic-nic.

NEWARK, N. J., June 9.

The Harness Makers' pic-nic to-day was attended by about 2,000 persons. Senator Sprague spoke about half an hour, reiterating his former opinion of national affairs. He said prosperity was unequal, and step by step the nation was losing its best interests and liberty. We want a corrective balance of power to prevent a few individuals from monopolizing power. We want money as cheap as it can be procured by the people of other countries to promote industry. He advised them to organize for their own protection.

Military Offenses.

ST. LOUIS, June 9.

Captain Wm. Eppis, who was ordered by General Scofield to ascertain how many persons are confined in the Missouri penitentiary for military offenses, sentenced by court martial, reports 125 as the number.

Allen and McCoole.

The last deposit of $500 aside in the match between Mike McCoole and Tom Allen was made last night at McCoole's saloon. The fight is to take place on next Tuesday, June 15th, but the place is not announced.

Insane.

OTTAWA, June 9.

Patrick Bukory, long confined in jail on suspicion of being an accomplice in the murder of D'Arcy McGee, has become insane and placed in a lunatic asylum.

Cruelty to Animals.

PHILADELPHIA, June 9.

The newly organized Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals commenced operations today by arresting city car drivers for overloading their cars.

Fire.

HAMILTON, June 9.

The hardware store of E. & B. Magill burned last night, and three adjoining stores were gutted. Loss, $75,000.

Suicide.

HALIFAX, June 9.

John Tobin, an ex-member of the Legislature, committed suicide by shooting this morning.

PETROLEUM MARKETS.

OFFICE OF THE MORNING HERALD, TITUSVILLE, June 9, 1869—6 p. m.

The tone of feeling in market on the creek was somewhat easier this morning, and lower were offered to sell at $4.90 to $5.00 at Miller Farm and Titusville, and at $5.20 at points on the creek south of Boyd. The first sales to buy were made at ten cents off the above prices. There were but very few buyers or sellers, and but a very little oil was being offered. Up to noon the situation remained substantially unchanged. Early in the afternoon the offering price at Petroleum Centre and points south of that place was lowered to $5.00; but at that price the demand was good, and all lots offered at it were rapidly taken. Toward the close there was a slight advance. The feeling improved under a more active inquiry for Cleveland, and sales were made up to $5.10 at the points last named, and at $5.30 on broad gauge cars at Oil City. There was some inquiry for future deliveries, and at the close $5.00 could have been readily obtained at the same points on the creek for S. O. 30 days. During the last half of the day there was a fair demand at Miller and Titusville at $1.00, with no sellers under $5.0. At Rouseville there were buyers at $4.60 to $4.70, according to locality. During the rise of Saturday and Monday nearly all the producers sold out their stocks, and some filling a little "short," and hence the amount offering at the wells today was small and the transactions were limited. The sales and re-sales aggregated 8,700 bbls, and included 5,000 for Cleveland, 2,000 to cover contracts, and 700 for Oil City.

PATENT SAFETY POWDER.

IMPORTANT TO

Engineers and Contractors.

We would call attention to the following testimonials:

BOSTON, Oct. 7, 1867.

GEO. J. G. FOSTER, U. S. A., Sir: My great success with the Patent Powder was mainly in recommending its blasting Granite Rocks, as I am confident we can do other powder can't accomplish the work without great loss of time and labor. Yours truly,

GEO. W. TOWNSEND, Superintending Engineer.

BOSTON, Oct. 10, 1867.

DEAR SIR: I feel we owe you a communication on receipt of a letter from Mr. Geo. W. Townsend, relative to the merits of the Patent Powder. I agree with Mr. Townsend that for submarine blasting it is the best powder we have ever used, and I would recommend its use under similar circumstances.

Very respectfully, your obt. serv't,

J. G. FOSTER, Ft. Mon'd General U. S. A.

The merits of this Powder are

1st. Its power for speed is the best Gunpowder, and will thus more save a large percentage in the cost of labor.

2d. Its perfect safety in handling, storing and transportation, as it will not explode when in bulk or covered with usual tamping, and the absence of air being necessary to produce explosion.

3d. Explosion generates little or no smoke, and the odor is entirely inoffensive.

4th. Will in many be substituted for hard tamping.

5th. Dampness does not deteriorate it.

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY, ENGLAND.

From W. TATHAM, Esq., Surveyor of Engineering to the Lords of the Admiralty, to Prof. Fleeter.

DARTMOUTH, DEVON.

DEAR SIR: I have tried your Powder and gave it in charge of about 1 ft. in depth, for submarine Works, about 10 feet, and finished was exploded in the entrance of this Harbor, and am happy to state that the results have been most satisfactory. The Powder is much stronger than Gunpowder, I have every reason to be recommended for submarine blasting, one of great advantage being that it may be transported and now stored with safety.

I am, dear Sir, W. TATHAM.

(Signed) Submarine Engineer to the Lords of the Admiralty.

STEARNS BROTHERS, No. 127, Chestnut Street, PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 25, 1868.

W. H. JACKSON, Esq., President Oriental Powder Co.

DEAR SIR: I made use of your Patent Explosive Compound introduced to my system in three months. In so hard rock we find it a very destructive agent. We have used it ever since.

About three weeks ago, in the presence of several gentlemen, we exploded a charge from nine to fifteen feet deep, using from one half to three inches of the compound in order to see how the effect of the horses with very satisfactory results. On the 10th ult. we shipped to you, we believe, two cases, where we should have used one hundred kegs of Blasting Powder. Our Foreman informs me they much prefer this compound to any other they have used.

Its decided advantage is such it saves drilling a deep one hole in three. We think by what we have seen, its effects three times greater than blasting powder.

Yours truly, ASTOR HOUSE, NEW ORLEANS, Contractor of the Baltimore Central Railroad.

W. H. JACKSON, Esq., President Oriental Powder Co., No. State Street, Boston.

DEAR SIR: We have given your new Blasting Compound a very thorough trial in our work on Seventh Avenue, between 110th and 116th Streets, and can fully endorse all you claim for it, viz., safety in handling and superior strength.

In wet and block holes and also in deep holes in solid rock for railroad work, we think a very great gain would be to the Government by using your powder.

Respectfully yours,

J. P. SULLIVAN, R. HEDGE, Contractors Central Park, New York.

The undersigned have used the Oriental Patent Safety Powder in blasting oil. We do cheerfully endorse all the foregoing certificates.

J. HENRY DELHAM, RALPH BAKER, WM. RICKARDS, Jr., C. F. FOWLER.

NOTICE.—On and after May 1st, the Patent Safety Powder will be sold in lots of not less than twenty five cases.

Educational Progress

How the world moves in educational matters! Go back a quarter of a century, to the time when you used to stand up before a board, "to do your examples" and just consider how swift the progress and how radical the change The old district school house was a barracks compared with the noble temples, as we may call them, which we now raise to the cause of science The rising generation then used to study their primers in a little boxes, with no grand hall, or grander stair case for the building was only one story high, with low ceiling, and creaking floor All the scholars were huddled together, big and little, boys and girls, and such a thing as "grades and departments were unthought of And as for fencing in the school yard, or setting out trees for a playground that would have seemed sheer nonsense and extravagance

The game of ball etc of former times, had none of those cumbrous rules, with interminable qualifications, none of those fancy costumes or dreary paraphernalia that now distinguish that noble pastime, nor was the tinkling bell that the master shook at the door anything like the dreadful summons that now sounds its alarum from the lofty cupola for miles around The course of study then was only rudimentary, with no Latin roots, no geometrical problems The chief stress was laid on learning "to parse, and the crowning achievement was to write as good as the master The "great field day," when the fond proud parents jammed into the house, and the boys spoke their pieces, "Marco Bozzaris" or Patrick Henry's oration, written so beautifully for that Revolutionary orator by his kind biographer, William Wirt

Those was the days when the ferule and the rod were the instruments of school discipline and parents couldn't help themselves Now, if a teacher flogs a truant or a recusant he is pretty likely to be hauled before a Justice of the Peace, or turned adrift by the Directors, and perhaps berated by the press as a ruffian and moral monster Perhaps the boys of the day are all so good and proper, and the "old Adam" so eliminated or expurgated from their systems that only "moral suasion" is required to keep them straight Perhaps so

A modern public school of the year 1869 is usually the best building in the town except the Church or Court House From belfry to basement, all is imposing, expensive and finished granite and rich woods, and decorating paints and iron pillars, and furnaces, and chambers of ventilation, and a Cathedral bell at the top flagged walks and leafy shades around Step within, and you see the institution is graded like 'Old Yale," according to age and attainment. The little Democrat, who may now be said to "patronize" the school, would as soon think of whittling his mother's parlor furniture as trying his knife on his handsome desk or chair riveted to the floor Globes and maps, and even the piano, attest the progress in refinement and in some public schools they can even boast of a philosophical apparatus and a select library of their own

This is not a fancy picture From the Bay State west to Minnesota, this is the spectacle presented in all the towns, where the printing press clanks and the sparks of popular intelligence leap from the electric wire It is even more so the further you go West The public school system is the peculiar pride of that generous, go ahead people, and they will not stint their bounty towards it The age is going ahead at a two-forty pace. The studies taught in schools are not yet broad enough in their range, nor thorough enough in their inculcations Physiology, political economy, the science of government, history, are either excluded altogether, or only slightingly attended to They ought to have a place, a constant and a prominent one in every school curriculum. And they will have, when they have been mastered by the living teacher, and when their uses and bearing, are comprehended adequately and insisted on, as they yet will be by those who have the charge and responsibility of our educational interests confided to their keeping

STRAWBERRY Festival at Corinthian Hall tonight.

STRAWBERRY Festival at Corinthian Hall tonight.

For the Titusville Herald

Reminiscences of Naples and its Vicinity.

It is a rainy night in October, 186-, that we take the train at Florence and compose ourselves for the long ride of over three hundred miles, which lie between us and Naples, the city of our destination

Morning dawns after we have entered the Papal dominions, and from the dirty, frowsy railway stations and the squalid bedraggled priests and people who hang about them, we are abundantly assured we are within the beneficent influences of papacy

Rome is reached at 9 o'clock in the morning, and halting only long enough to change cars, we keep on our southward course Our way lies over the Campagna, that melancholy sweep of undulating flat that stretches away for miles on either side of the Eternal City In the gay sunlight the great extent of ruins lying outside of Rome, on the Naples side, is plainly visible. Through the arches of the broken aqueducts the sunshine shows other broken arches shining through them in the melancholy distance. Miles away we look from the car window back over the dark undulating waste we have traversed, flowing like a broad, dull Lethe round the walls of Rome, and separating it from all the world How often, must we have the Legions in triumphal march gone glittering across that purple waste, so silent and unpeopled now! How often has the train of captives looked with sinking hearts upon the distant city and beheld its population pouring out to hail the return of their conqueror! What riot, sensuality and murder have run mad in the vast palaces now heaps of brick and shattered marble! What glare of fires and roar of popular tumult, and wail of pestilence and famine, have come sweeping over the wild plain where nothing is now heard but the wind, and where the solitary birds sport unmolested in the sun

Further on as we go, the country about us assumes the tropical type which belongs to lower Italy The orange, the lemon and the olive trees are seen in all their luxuriance It is dark when we reach Naples, and we are rattled rapidly in a fiacre through its narrow streets to our hotel

Early in the morning we ascend the hill back of town, on which stands the monastery of San Martino, from a balcony of which we have uninterrupted views of the city, the bay and surrounding country

The day is serene and cloudless The sky is a deep and beautiful blue, and the bay is one vast tranquil sea of liquid sapphire Below us rise the crowded houses of Naples, terrace above terrace to our very feet, while from its streets ascend the thousand and one cries of fuel and water venders To our right tower the picturesque crags of Ischia and Procida, and the long reach of land that encircles the bay on the north To the left lies the island of Capri, looking a mellow pink in the golden haze of sunshine that envelops it Further to the right is the promontory of Sorrento, crowned with gray monasteries, embosomed in olive and orange groves, while fronting and facing us with its double crest, Vesuvius frowns in sullen silence the faintest feather of smoke floating above its peak

There is no sight in the wide world that can compare in loveliness with that of Naples and its environs Descending the hills we walk through the busy streets and observe the unique panorama of life that belongs only to Naples Scarlet-mouth boys, with dirty Phrygian caps bare legged and otherwise bare, perched on rickety carts, drawn by poor emaciated donkeys, rattle along, screaming at their animals at every step and cracking their short thonged whips about their heads between screams Hawkers of all sorts of fruits, vegetables and saleable articles, howl and screech at the top of their voices Hack drivers crack their whips like pistol shots about our ears to modestly call attention to the fact that they are open for employment Squalid beggars, ragged and irrepressible, thrust their dirty hands under our noses and appeal by all the saints for charity There are booths where iced wine and water are served from swinging kegs and money changers on a small scale sit at the street corners with a few piles of coppers before them Macaroni vendors tear through the streets crying the 'Roma' and 'Burgolo'—outvying their New York brethren in slang and impudence The whole population seems to be out of doors, cobblers, tailors, and all species of work people sit in their doorways or on the sidewalks, and busily ply their vocations Fond mothers run to the open streets into nurseries, and attend to the wants of infancy in the most innocent and refreshing manner Other doating ones, with a commendable maternal solicitude, but with a disregard to appearances, are searching their children's heads for something else. Besides phrenological bumps Other brats paddle about in the mud and dirt with the slightest apology of garment hanging to their youthful limbs Wrinkled crones sit spinning flax with old fashioned distaffs croaking to each other as they spin A one horse caleche drives by, filled as only Neapolitan vehicles can be filled For there are six people inside, four in front, four or five hanging on in some inconceivable way behind, and two or three more in a net or bag below the axletree where they behold suffocated with dust Quiet letter writers, perched behind their desks and inkstands under the portico of the Great Theatre San Carlino are waiting for clients Exhibitions of Punch, singers with guitars, reciters of stories cheap exhibitions with clowns and showmen, drums and trumpets and admiring crowds assembled without assist the whirl and bustle Ragged lazzaroni lie asleep in doorways, archways and gutters, while the aristocracy gaily dressed are dashing up and down in carriages on the Chiaja or walking in the public gardens All this, and every other kind of outdoor life and air and novelty, maccaroni eating at sunset flower selling all day, and begging and stealing everywhere and at all hours, do we see upon the bright sea shore where the waves of the bay sparkle merrily Such a motley, bustling noisy, picturesque and degraded city, certainly never had its fellow

Having fallen in with two young American travelers, we make up a party of five for the ascent of Vesuvius, and one lowering morning we bowled out of Naples in an easy open carriage, to that end. Our first objective point is the village of Resina six miles distant from Naples where the carriage road terminates and the ascent proper of the mountain commences The road coasts the east shore of the bay but is so completely shut in by villas, palaces and houses that make up the suburban towns of Portici and Torre del Greco, that it has more the character of a continuation of one of the Naples streets, than of a high road

It is an hour before we reach Resina, built up on the volcanic tufa and lava, overlying the ancient city of Herculaneum Upon leaving the carriage, we are mobbed by something less than four hundred howling banditti, who desire the infinite honor of escorting our most noble and illustrious selves up the mountain Not appreciating the absolute necessity of employing the whole number and marching up like Falstaff with his Coventry regiment of ragged mallows—we make a judicious selection, comprising those who look as if they had been washed once within the current year—and who luxuriate in the blessings of whole shoes and unfractured breeches

Mounting our horses, built to the severe order of gothic architecture—our guide shouts "en route." The escort of attendants give a valedictory howl, and our faces are turned to the mountain top The ascent at first is gradual, the road leading through flourishing orchards and vineyards encircling the lower base of the mountain. In about an hour we are beyond the arable district, and emerge upon a bleak bare region, where the lava lies confusedly, in enormous rusty masses, as if ploughed up by burning thunderbolts. Our path winds through this sombre waste for a half hour longer, when we arrive at the Hermitage, built upon a narrow ridge sufficiently elevated to ensure safety from the descending lava currents when the volcano is active. Here resting our gothic steeds a few minutes, we push on by an abominable path, rugged and steep, made through the vast sea of lava and volcanic debris for an hour longer, when we enter the narrow valley called "Ætna dis Cavelli," which separates the cone of Vesuvius from its sister peak Monte Somma In this gorge the wildest desolation meets the eye The solemnity and dreariness that reigns around are unutterable On the right rises abruptly the cone of Vesuvius at an angle of fifty degrees, covered with crevices, stones and grey ashes. On the left, rising perpendicularly 1 400 feet, is the bare brown wall of Monte Somma—stretching as far as the vision reaches, while about and around on all sides of the cannon we traverse, lie shapeless masses of lava, ashes and stones in every phase of chaotic confusion. Arrived at the foot of the cone, the horses are left in charge of one of the attendants, and we gird up our loins for the fatiguing ascent Most of our party avail themselves of the assistance of the staff of hangers on who have accompanied us thus far By reason of a debilitated frame and constitutional indisposition to physical exertion, I accept the services of two. One precedes me with a knotted handkerchief over his shoulders to which I cling, who is supposed to carry up the front half of me, tack load fashion, while his friend and second patriot gently boosts me from the rear, and is supposed to push up the other, or heavier half But this division of labor is purely theoretical, for though both my assistants do a tremendous deal of grunting, the greater share of exertion falls to me.

The crest of Vesuvius rears itself 1500 feet above us The path, or rather direction, for path there is none, is over a bed of broken stones that offer a doubtful and uncertain foothold One hour, with frequent pauses to rest, we toil up the steep incline, and at last, when every fiber quivers with its vertigo—worn, aching and panting, we reach the top We seek the shelter of an overhanging crag of lava, and while we rest our weary muscles, the enterprising host of the Hermitage cooks us the customary eggs in the crevices at our feet, and we sample his bottles of apocryphal Lachryma Christi

The weather, which has been more or less stormy all day, now puts on a threatening aspect However, under the pilotage of our guide, we descend into the crater, and traverse it from end to end Over a suspicious crust of lava we cautiously make our way The interior—irregular and jagged—is rent in all directions by great gaping seams, from which the most noisome sulphur vapors escape Masses of scoriæ, stones and ashes are heaped up in disordered array, while upon the walls of the crater are precipitates of sulphur and salt sparkling in white and yellow colors Stifled by the vapors, with boots blistered and parboiled, we make our way back to our first shelter The threatening storm now bursts in all its violence The rain falls in sheets and the wind howls a hurricane Comfortably housed in our well sheltered nook, with a grateful warmth rising from below, we are inclined to look with unconcern upon this war of elements But an hour has gone by, and there is no abatement of the storm Warned by the lateness of the hour, our guide advises a descent, at all hazards The descent is made by a different route, over a layer of ashes three or four feet deep Upon the brink of the cone we face our destiny The wind blows such blasts we can scarcely keep our feet, the rain falls in torrents, and makes the world and all below us one vast blot of nothingness But forward is the word Down, down the steep declivity we go with plunging steps each stride sinking to the knees in the treacherous wet ashes The rain drops pelt our faces remorselessly and we stop and shrink close to the mountain side as the violent gusts sweep down the gorge Clouds of vapor are driving down the valley and it begins to grow dark Down down we go with titanic leaps 'Courage,' whispers the guide who has my arm, and in an undertone invokes the protection of some favorite saint The wind sweeps my cap from my head, and whirls it out of sight On, I stagger, bareheaded to the storm Ten minutes suffice to reach the bottom It seems ten hours Here are the horses frightened and trembling I wind my handkerchief about my head, and mounting, the descent is continued Over the fields of lava again we go plunging and floundering for two mortal hours The storm abates no jot of its fury, and it is with difficulty at times our poor beasts can keep their legs

At last, wet, weary, galled and in a general state of collapse, we go bedraggled into Resina

Once again in our carriage, we are whirled back to Naples, where after a bath and a change of clothes, we sit down at night to a good dinner, and under the genial influence of a flask of Capri wine, laugh over the day's adventures

Cuba.

The news from Cuba, through Spanish sources say that four thousand Cuban insurgents have surrendered We suppose that but little reliance can be placed on the report Intelligence of only a few days previous speaks of the insurgents' cause as highly prosperous, and in a hopeful condition This is the tone of the dispatches and letters from the correspondent of the Tribune, sent to Cuba to pick up all the news in relation to the war

We cannot but regard the recent outbreak of the Spanish volunteers against the Captain General and certain of the military subordinates as an evidence of anarchy and a weakness of the Spanish cause on the Island It may not distract to the extent some suppose, but it is a remarkable turn in affairs, and we apprehend it will cheer and encourage the insurgents

If reports can be credited a number of expeditions from the shores of the United States, have recently made a successful landing in Cuba We can only hope that these reports are true Yet they lack to a certain extent confirmation Each side seems given to exaggeration, and magnify many times any little engagement and victory But time will decide, and the war must eventually end with the victory of one or the other of the parties, and an acknowledgment of the authority of the dominant faction While as a people we can do little more than sympathize with the insurgents, it does not lessen the deep interest we feel, and the solicitude with which we watch the contest

CAPT. H E WRIGLEY has for sale a few copies of a map of Western Pennsylvania, (of which the original stone is destroyed) It is peculiarly valuable to oil miners, as showing the entire oil range—and being out of print, cannot be elsewhere obtained.

The East India Telegraph Company.

Following close upon the completion of the Pacific Railroad, which links the commerce of the Indies to the United States, we shall witness the fulfillment of an equally stupendous enterprise, viz: the extension—by an American company—of the telegraph into China, and the completion of the line by Arabia and India to the Asiatic coast.

At the annual meeting of the stockholders of the East India Telegraph Company—held at their office No 57 Broadway, New York, June 27, 1869, at 12 o'clock, the following persons were elected directors

The Directors organized at 4 o'clock on the same day, by the election of the following officers

Ex Gov Andrew G Curtin, of Pennsylvania, President.

Geo K. Anderson, of Pennsylvania, Vice President.

Hon. Wm. H. Kemble, of Pennsylvania, Treasurer

Hon. Alexander K McClure, of Pennsylvania, Solicitor

George Conant, of New York, Secretary

James Milliken, General Agent to go abroad

Among the gentlemen named in this connection will be recognized several prominent capitalists, others distinguished in public life, and some previously identified with the most successful enterprises of the day Gov Curtin, who is honored with the Presidency of the company is about to enter upon the duties of a foreign mission, and the responsibilities of his new position necessarily devolve upon Mr Anderson, whose business energy and experience, coupled with his financial ability, peculiarly fit him for the place.

The company is now fully prepared for practical operations, and their general agent James Milliken, Esq., sails from New York for London to day Six hundred miles of cable have already been shipped for the coast line from Shanghai to Canton, a distance of 900 miles, embracing commercial cities on the coast with an aggregate population of 8 000 000 The vessel, machinery, etc, requisite to the undertaking convey the cable, and it will be laid under the protection of United States Government vessel, specially deputed for the service By fall the first telegraph office will be opened in China at Canton a city of 1 000,000 people From there it will be extended 70 miles, to Macao, a city of 60 0000 people, thence 75 miles, to Hong Kong, a city of 250,000 people, thence 130 miles to Swatow, a city of 200,000 people, thence 115 miles, to Amoy, a city of 250 000 people, and then 120 miles, to Foo Chow, a city of 1 250 000 people Within the next sixty days the East India Company will contract in London or Paris for five hundred miles more of cable to complete the line from Foo Chow to Shanghai, which will unite all the great commercial cities of Asiatic telegraph The importance of this enterprise may be appreciated when it is considered that these Chinese cities have a foreign commerce of $1 500,000,000 annually, besides their vast local commerce with the interior of the empire There is not a mile of railroad, telegraph, express, or public mail to facilitate communication between the people, and many commercial houses are compelled to keep private steamers to convey their business orders and trade from city to city Mr Burlingame, while American minister, prevailed upon the Chinese government to give a grant to the East India Company to lay a cable along the coast and the company feel assured that the introduction of the telegraph by sea will soon demonstrate its necessity by land to the inland cities They will ship with the cable some 2 000 miles of land wire, and will be fully prepared to push the telegraph into the interior of the Ancient Empire It is a source of just pride that American interests, having bewildered the world by the completion of the Pacific Railroad, are about to produce so great an achievement for civilization as the introduction of the telegraph to dissipate the benighted superstitions of the oldest and most populous empire of the world

As a cotemporary remarks, American enterprise is now confined to the advancement of civilization into the Flowery Kingdom While our American capitalists are about to land the telegraph in China, another company, or rather a combination of companies, in which Cyrus W Field, the great American hero of cable success is the leading spirit, are steadily extending the cable toward the rising sun, to reach China by India The cable already stretches from Marseilles, down the Mediterranean and Red Sea, to the Arabian Sea, and will be extended from Bombay, around the coast of Hindostan, to the Island of Ceylon From there a line will run north to Calcutta, while the main line will follow the Indian Ocean to the China Sea, and connect with the East India Company's line at Hong Kong This will bring the commerce of India, China, Japan and Asiatic Russia into direct communication with Europe and America, leaving only the Pacific ocean to be crossed to encircle the entire globe with the magnetic telegraph

The year 1869 will therefore be memorable in the annals of progress not only for the completion of the Pacific Railroad, but also for the introduction of the telegraph into China and the completion of the line by Arabia and India to the Asiatic coast The continents spanned by railroad, and the commerce of the whole world, civilized and heathen, brought into direct communication by the lightning messenger—such will be the recorded achievements of Christian civilization and progress in the year 1869

American silver cannot be taken into the Dominion of Canada in larger sums than five dollars, without the payment of duty. This method is adopted to prevent the influx of American silver, of which the Canadians have been complaining so bitterly. The Custom House officials search the persons of travelers very strictly, and allow silver change to the amount of five dollars to pass, but the duty is rigidly exacted on all greater sums.
